Parent Questionnaires

Thank you so much to the parents and carers that have taken the time to complete and return the two parent questionnaires sent out to all families last week. We know it takes a little more time when narrative boxes need writing.

Please, if you have not already done so, send completed questionnaires back into school via Miss Jones in Reception. We really value your views and we're keen to hear your thoughts.

Many thanks!

Christmas Play Tickets

Our upcoming Christmas play performances are ticketed events.

Tickets cost £2.50 each regardless of which performance you are attending. Each attendee needs their own ticket.

Tickets can be purchased for any of the 4 (in total) performances from Miss Jones in Reception from today with cash ideally in the correct amount.

Spelling Corrections

In one of our returned parent questionnaires, a responder raised confusion over seeing spelling errors in their child's writing that were not corrected by a teacher so we thought it best to explain the thinking behind this approach. Spelling errors in some children's writing are very frequent. If teachers corrected every single spelling, it would be very demotivating for the children and cause more harm to their confidence and enthusiasm to write at all.

Teachers have to carefully assess each child's age, stage of development, current level of progress, writing confidence, spelling skills and spelling needs when deciding the appropriate balance of corrections in their marking to ensure spelling progress is made but the child does not become demoralised as a result.

As a school, we have an agreed approach in marking to identify the three most 'urgent' spelling errors in a piece of writing and write them correctly for the child to copy out three times in purple pen in order to practise the correct spelling. If we did this for all spelling errors, it would be overwhelming for children and the impact on their spelling progress would be minimised. We hope this makes our marking approach a little clearer for everyone. We thank the original responder for raising the question and enabling us to clarify it for all parents.

Many thanks.

Tips for Parents

Bedtime

Sometimes your child will fall asleep easily and sleep through the night. At other times they may have difficulty falling asleep and may wake in the night. A bedtime routine can help make bedtime easier.

You can plan ahead by:

- Thinking about timing. If your child takes a long time to fall asleep you might be putting them to bed too early. If they get too wound up to sleep you might be putting them to bed too late.
- Having a consistent bedtime routine. Do the same thing every night at the same time. Find the routine that works for your family.
- Letting your child know bedtime is coming up. "When we have finished this game it will be time to get ready for bed".
- Avoiding too much stimulation before bed. Try to avoid loud or boisterous play or screen-based activity like TV, computers, tablets or other handheld devices. Focus on activities that help your child feel calm. You might also like to think about what your child has eaten and how that might affect their sleep.
- Checking your child has done everything they need, to avoid them calling out during the night. Have they had a drink? Been to the toilet? Got their favourite teddy?
- Giving them a safe thing to take to bed like a teddy, or blanket. Leave a night light on or leave the door ajar. Then tuck your child in and say goodnight.
- If your child keeps getting out of bed, think about if there is anything else they may need (this might be you). Return your child gently and calmly to their bed. Do this as many times as it takes until your child stays in bed.

Where to get advice and support

Universal parenting support and advice is provided by midwives, health visitors, GPs and your local authority. Early help programmes such as Flying Start (if you live in a Flying Start area) and Families First are also available.

Look after yourself. Meeting up with other parents can be great for your wellbeing. Your local Family Information Service (www.fis.wales) will be able to tell you what's on in your area.
